

Nothing defines the mood and ambience of the wedding as much as the décor. It draws together all the various aspects which will express the hearts' desires of the bridal couple. Without these, the wedding would be a very dull affair indeed.

The ambience of the venue and the mood and theme of the wedding also need to be taken into account. It helps if your florist hires out glass vases and stands etc as this reduces your cost by simply paying a hire fee instead of having to buy these items. Such things as sparkling crystals and lights shining inside water all help to create the right atmosphere, as do candles and coloured water if used in the right setting. Glass sparkles and silver always look elegant; your florist should be skilled enough to advise you in these matters.

Furthermore, your florist should have a good working relationship with the staff on site, and be fully acquainted with your venue so as to exploit it to your best advantage.

As you are entrusting your vision to your florist, choose your specialist with care. It is vital to ensure that your florist is fully experienced in all aspects of wedding work. Each bride is an individual, with her own special personality. The florist you choose must be able to express this and to understand the bride's requirements.
