

Wallis & Kevin Szasztor

06 August 2006

In Jewish tradition, the bride and groom are not allowed to see each other a week before the wedding, so Kevin and I had no contact for the entire time, which was very strange indeed! I heard Kevin's car pulling up into the driveway and heard his whole entourage arriving. I was tempted to stick my head out of the room, but was told in no uncertain terms by all around me, absolutely not!!

That was the last we heard from them for a few hours!

I had expected a few last minute questions from the Oakfield staff, but as the time drew nearer, not one question had been asked. I started to panic and took a sneak peek of the Homestead. I was transfixed; the room looked absolutely beautiful. Thanks to Wilme and her team at Café Fleur, the flowers and décor were stunning, the beauty of the room undeniable. The thatched roof and the delicate tulips provided a breathtaking contrast. Now I knew I was in safe hands and I need not worry about a thing! Andrew and his team had everything under control.
