Walking alone down the aisle, Cherise met her groom halfway and it is her prayer that in every situation they face, they will always meet each other halfway and walk together to the end of their lives.

Danie and Cherise opted for a Thursday, late evening wedding with a 'Harvest' theme—not only saving an exorbitant amount of money, but friends and family were able to turn this event in to a long weekend.

Having their photographs taken prior to the ceremony showed consideration for their guests and allowed them two full hours in which they could relax knowing that they were not keeping anyone waiting, yet still experienced that joyful and emotional moment when they saw each other for the first time.

They had none of the traditional rituals that go with weddings and believe that doing things differently impacted positively on their budget—having electronic invitations and no cake, meant they could spend this money on items which had more value for them.
